This is a sample published piece — replace it with your real published work. For the published book, the date should be the date of publication, and the citation line can carry the venue.

We carry and see the names of people anywhere we go, in the works they left to the world. A work is left the moment it is complete; it immediately becomes history.

The published book differs from the others only in what it collects: finished, released work. Everything about the layout — the cover, the section dividers, the chronological order — is shared, because it is one house style.
